ROOT STOCK RESEARCH

Many species, varieties and hybrids of different plants are not capable of growing vigorously on their own roots....We have found many rare tropicals dont actually succumb to frost or freezing in the Citrus Belt but actually perish from roots that rot during the rainy season or die from dryness during the summer....These same plant types that do this on their own roots can overcome this if grafted or budded on a related specie and grow and produce fruit and flowers abundantly. We believe the following can be grown in the Citrus Belt with the proper rootstock, these being: Brazil Nut Breadfruit, Mango, Papaya, Cashew Nut, Lytchee Royal Poinciana, Shower Trees, Banyan Tree, and many other lesser known fruit and flower ing exotics...Ask your supplier if these
